“Spring has returned. The Earth is like a child that knows poems.”
-Rainer Maria Rilke
ENG 101: College Composition

Prerequisites: All beginning college writers sign up for ENG 101
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): ENG 101 is mandatory for all students
Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): None

Course description: An introductory course in college writing in which students practice the ways writing and reading serve to expand, clarify, and order experience and knowledge. Particular attention is given to analytic and persuasive writing. To complete the course successfully, students must write all assignments and must have portfolios of their best work approved by a committee of readers other than their classroom teachers.

The Translingual Sections of ENG 101: Half the seats are reserved for multilingual students; half are reserved for other students who have a personal or professional interest in language difference (journalism, international business or engineering, social work, education, etc.). The logic of the section is twofold: first, we assume that putatively monolingual native speakers of English and multilingual speakers of English have much to learn from each other; second, the rapidly globalizing workplace needs people who can negotiate productively across multiple languages.

Please confirm that your students are specifically interested in enrolling in the Translingual Section due to the explanations above; please have them submit a brief description of their interests to our Writing Center Director Paige Mitchell via email: paige.mitchell@maine.edu

This section is located in Belfast at the Hutchinson Center – FHC.

The Multiliteracy Writing Center: Traditionally the Writing Center provides one-on-one tutor support for any writing and reading assignment. We still provide that support and beginning in the 2016 spring semester we will support multimodal projects. This means we can help with document and website design such as incorporating images and/or sounds, posters, flyers, publishing iBooks, and we'll also support PowerPoint presentations and have podiums and resources to support public speaking assignments. Please view our schedule to see the new Writing Workshop programs we provide, and please consider using the Multiliteracy Writing Center as a comfortable place to read, compose, and design projects.

If you're interested in learning more about what the Multiliteracy Writing Center supports, or in having a representative from the center visit your class, please contact our Writing Center Director Paige Mitchell via email: paige.mitchell@maine.edu

Course description: This course provides intense practice with habits of reading, writing, thinking, and revising essential to postsecondary academic work. Designed for students who want to create a strong foundation for themselves in academic reading and writing. Available only during spring semester. Sections of 106 will be scheduled at the same time of day during spring semester as sections of 100 were in the fall semester. We expect that cohorts will continue from fall to spring.

Students must complete both ENG 100 and ENG 106 with a grade of C or better in each course to satisfy the General Education College Composition requirement. Neither course taken alone will satisfy the requirement.

Prerequisite: C or better in ENG 100.

ENG 129:0400/0990 (30654/28198): Topics in English: Navigating Borders (Audrey Le) WEB
Prerequisites: First-year students only. May be taken before or after ENG 101 or concurrently with permission.
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Writing Intensive Course description: 'Navigating Borders' is an examination of 20th and 21st century multicultural and transnational literature exploring the dualities and sacrifices that women and men experience as they attempt to balance — and, in some cases, merely survive — their commitments to family, heritage, and new surroundings. Struggling with the ambiguities of boundaries and borders, these individuals are pushed to the limit, especially when family and safety are at risk. Some of the experiences detailed in these texts depict the urgency to escape, the need for secrecy, and the meaning of personal identity. Each author weaves a tale — mostly inspired by true events — about the complexities of a micro-level identity within the larger meso, national, and global scopes of family, home, community, and country. We will address international perspectives and the personal implications of what it means to navigate 'borders' as the characters face (un)certain obstacles, blurred boundaries, and the perilous spaces in between.

Required texts:
Catfish and Mandala
Andrew Pham (Vietnam/America)

Girl in Translation
Jean Kwok (Hong Kong/America)

M. Butterfly
Henry David Hwang (China/Vietnam/France)

Woman at Point Zero
Nawal el Saadawi (Egypt/Prison)

ENG 129:0001 (28197): Topics in English: Writing About Film (Stephen David Wicks)
SL311 – 2:00 p.m. – TTH
Prerequisites: First-year students only. May be taken before or after ENG 101 or concurrently with permission.
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Writing Intensive Course description: Writing About Film is an intensive writing course that uses films as the basis for student writing assignments. Film screenings, combined with supplementary readings such as reviews, analyses, and essays, will introduce students to the basic approaches to film study. Students will be able to appreciate films in historical, cultural, and theoretical context and understand how they make meaning through elements such as narrative structure, character development, and visual and sound effects.

The film aspects of the course form a useful foundation for advancing essential writing skills including creating a thesis, using supporting resources effectively, proper formatting, giving and receiving peer criticism, and revising.

ENG 131:0001 (28199): The Nature of Story (Harvey A Kail)
NV 101 – 9:30 a.m. – TTH
Prerequisites: None
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Western Cultural Tradition and Cultural Diversity & International Perspectives
Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): None

Course description: English 131 explores the fundamental activity of why and how we create, tell and read/listen to stories. Readings may include selections from folk tale and myth, saga and epic, drama and novel, film and song, poetry and essay–from the ancient world to the modern, from the western cultural tradition and from a variety of other cultures. The main goal of this division of ENG 131 is to help each student acquire and develop creative and constructive reading practices. Creative reading means to engage with literature as if one is the instrument of the text, not the other way around, in order to be able to release the energy of the story through its language. This practice of creative reading has many practical consequences, which we will take up in our class work. To read constructively means to learn to build an understanding of a story reflectively and in critical conversation with others: fellow students, teachers, and scholars. We will be reading a variety of texts/films, both fiction and non-fiction, including fairy tales, sudden fictions (short, short stories), novels and film. Here is a partial reading list:

Fairy Tales, Charles Perrault
Sudden Fiction International, Robert Shephard and James Thomas, Eds
I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings, Maya Angelou
Hearts in Atlantis, Stephen King
The Things They Carried, Tim O’Brien
ENG 170: Foundations of Literary Analysis
Prerequisite: ENG 101 is strongly recommended for all sections
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): None
Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): ENG 170 is a core course

*6 spaces reserved for English majors & minors; 6 for incoming first-year English majors

Course Description: This course is designed as a close reading of literary texts for students preparing to become English majors. We will explore how conventions of genre, form and style work in literature and develop a vocabulary for understanding and communicating ideas about literature. We will write regularly throughout the semester to practice the critical discourse expected of English majors.

William
Course Description: Offers students experience in writing in three major forms: autobiographical narrative, fiction, and poetry.

ENG 206:0001 (27190): Descriptive and Narrative Writing (Robert Brinkley)
5370 – 9:30 a.m. - TTH
Prerequisites: ENG 101 or equivalent.
Satisfies the general education Artistic & Creative Expression and Writing Intensive requirements.
Course description: ENG 206 has been taught in many ways. This Fall, I began to teach it as a course in documentary writing—I have like that approach and what it is achieving—and I will try adopt the same approach for the Spring 2017 course. The course begins by considering what can be achieved in documentary films and works to consider how documentary can work in writing (prose and poetry) as well. Touchstones for the course are Claude Lanzmann’s film Shoah and Svetlana Alexievich’s nonfiction novel Voices from Chernobyl. Each student will be asked to do their own documentary.

ENG 222: Reading Poems
Prerequisite: 3 credit hours of English
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Western Cultural Tradition, Artistic & Creative Expression and Writing Intensive Satisfies the Following English Major Requirement: ENG 222 is a core course Course description: This course, required of all English majors, focuses on helping students develop critical skills particularly suited to the interpretation and analysis of poetry. It is intended to prepare students to read and write about poems with intelligence and finesse. Readings will include poems from different eras in both traditional and innovative forms, and may cover a range of poetic practices and a variety of media: including, for example, poetry readings, little magazines and presses, digital texts, and poetic movements. By the end of this course students will be able to identify a variety of poetic devices, forms, tropes, and movements. They will also have read and/or listened to some of the most admired poems in the English language, know their authors, eras, and importance in the history of poetry. Evaluation will be based on quizzes, papers, and participation.

Required Texts:
The Norton Anthology of Poetry, Shorter Fifth Edition
MLA Handbook
Handouts

Assignments:
Reading assignments, poetry reading response paper, in-class exercises, quizzes, a possible prelim, four or more papers of various lengths, and a final.

ENG 229:0990(28259): Topics in Literature: Stephen King (Alan Marks) WEB
Prerequisite: 3 credit hours of English

Course description: It would be an understatement to say that Stephen King is Maine’s most famous author. With over 50 novels and more than 200 short stories to his credit (providing the inspiration or basis for roughly 40 films and counting, and over 20 television series/mini-series), King is arguably the world’s most famous author. He is a past winner of the Hugo Award, the Bram Stoker Award, the World Fantasy Award; is the recipient of the National Book Foundation’s Medal for Distinguished Contribution to American Letters; and in 2014 was awarded a National Medal of the Arts.

Given the enormous amount of work to his credit, any attempt at a comprehensive overview of King’s writing would be impossible. Instead, this discussion-based course will look at selections from his bibliography that represent some of the more notable themes that come up throughout his works. Some areas that the course will look at may include (but aren’t limited to): the nature of good vs. evil, ghosts (real and/or psychological), his portrayal of adolescent characters, the autobiographical influences in his writing (including such issues as alcoholism/substance-abuse, his life as a writer, etc.), the “dark side” of small towns, and so on.

The reading list for the course has not yet been set but may include some of the following:
'Salem’s Lot
The Shining
The Dark Tower: The Gunslinger
Misery
The Dark Half
Hearts in Atlantis (novella)
Night Shift (short stories)
Stand By Me (film)

Tech Help: Email CEDTECHHELP@UMIT.MAINE.EDU or call 1-877-947-4357 or 207-581-3199.

ENG 229:WINT(28261): Topics in Literature: Science Fiction (Alan Marks) WEB - WINTER TERM
Prerequisite: 3 credit hours of English

Course description: Much of science fiction can be divided into two main categories: Hard science fiction, which attempts to base itself on sound scientific ideas; and escapist “space opera” like the Star Trek and Star Wars novels. There is also a third category, however, perhaps best described as metaphysical or philosophical science fiction. This type of science fiction attempts to answer questions about existence that are beyond mere science, and one that is certainly not “escapist” fiction. That’s the type of thought-provoking science fiction that this course deals with. Past texts have included such major science fiction authors as Ursula K. Le Guin, Arthur C. Clarke, Robert Heinlein and Philip K. Dick, as well as films like 2001: A Space Odyssey and The Matrix. The goal of the course is to look beyond the surface of these texts to the philosophical, metaphysical and even religious ideas that provide their focus and meaning, and which, ultimately, might make us look at the world around us in a different way.

Previous topics have included: scandalous women, detective fiction, apocalypse, dark humor in literature, and literature of the Vietnam war. May be repeated for credit.

Tech Help: Email CEDTECHHELP@UMIT.MAINE.EDU or call 1-877-947-4357 or 207-581-3199.

ENG 229:0991(28260): Topics in Literature: Home (not so) Sweet Home (Audrey Le) WEB
Prerequisite: 3 credit hours of English

Course description: This course will examine a variety of texts that draw psychological and metaphoric connections between the persona and consciousness of the main character and the house s/he inhabits.

Proposed Texts:
Alias Grace    Margaret Atwood
House of Sand and Fog Andre Dubus
A Room of One's Own Virginia Woolf
Sacred Country Rose Tremain
House on Mango Street Sandra Cisneros

ENG 238:0001 (28626): Nature & Literature (Sarah Harlan-Haughey)
BD207 – 12:30 p.m. – TTH
Prerequisite: 3 hours of English
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Ethics
Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): 200-level literature course

Course description: ENG 238 will discuss the treatment of nature in poetry, short fiction, journals, novels, and essays. It will look at the many different ways people have looked at nature and at some of the various traditions of writing about it including the pastoral and nature writing. It will include traditional literary figures, American nature writers, environmentalists, and authors from Maine.

ENG 243:0001 (28262): Topics in Multicultural Literature: Elements (William Yellow Robe)
BD115 – 2 p.m. - TTH
Prerequisite: 3 hours of English
Satisfies the general education Ethics, Western Cultural Tradition and Cultural Diversity & International Perspectives

Course description: Topics will vary, including such titles as Ethnicity and Race in American Literature; Caribbean Literature; Third World Literature; and other topics in African, Asian, Francophone, Native American, Chicano and ethnic literatures in the English language.
ENG 245:0001 (28263): American Short Fiction (Deborah Rogers)
NV100 – 3:30 p.m. – TTH
Prerequisite: 3 hours of English
Satisfies the general education Ethics, Western Cultural Tradition and Artistic & Creative Expression
Course description: This course is a study of American short fiction from Irving to the present. We will proceed chronologically, concentrating on those formal developments that have made the short story a particularly American genre. Evaluation will be based on exercises, a paper, quizzes, midterm, and final.

ENG 246:0990 (28264): American Women's Literature (Leonore Hildebrandt) WEB
Prerequisites: 3 hours of English
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Western Cultural Tradition, Cultural Diversity and International Perspectives, and Ethics
Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): 200-level literature course
Course description: A survey of the main traditions and writers in American women's literature from the origins to the present.
This course is combined with WGS 201:0991.

ENG 271:0001 (29217): The Act of Interpretation (Carla Billitteri)
NV206 – 12:00 p.m. – MWF
Prerequisite: ENG 170
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Western Cultural Tradition and Writing Intensive
Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): ENG 271 is a core course
Note: Some spaces in each section are reserved for English majors and minors.
Course Description: ENG 271 looks closely at significant works of modern hermeneutics (a discipline that concerns itself with the constitution of our acts of interpretation) and reception theory (a discipline that concerns itself with the study of the stability and/or variability of textual interpretation across time and across media). We will also explore contemporary trends in hermeneutics and interpretation theory, such as cognitive poetics and affect theory. The semester is divided in three parts: part one (week one to four): main concepts and key terms in literary hermeneutics and interpretation theory; part two (week five to eight): modern hermeneutics and reception theory; part three (week nine to thirteen): cognitive poetics and affect theory.
Objectives, outcomes, and intellectual focus: The close and systematic study of theory you will encounter in ENG 271 looks closely at significant works of modern hermeneutics (a discipline that concerns itself with the constitution of our acts of interpretation) and reception theory (a discipline that concerns itself with the study of the stability and/or variability of textual interpretation across time and across media). We will also explore contemporary trends in hermeneutics and interpretation theory, such as cognitive poetics and affect theory. The semester is divided in three parts: part one (week one to four): main concepts and key terms in literary hermeneutics and interpretation theory; part two (week five to eight): modern hermeneutics and reception theory; part three (week nine to thirteen): cognitive poetics and affect theory.
Objectives, outcomes, and intellectual focus: The close and systematic study of theory you will encounter in ENG 271 is meant to enhance the awareness of the shaping function of philosophical perspectives in interpreting literary texts, and to facilitate the understanding of the rich complexity of the philosophical foundations of contemporary literary interpretation. These are the main objectives of this course. The principal outcome of this course consists in making students aware that acts of interpretation are historical-specific acts of cultural intervention shaped from the inside by the cultural horizon of the .reader and from the outside by the cultural horizon of the text. The dual constitution of this interaction of cultural horizons and the manifestation of its processual unfolding is the intellectual focus of the course.

Assignments: In-class quizzes, several take-home assignments, and two papers (five to six pages in length). In-class quizzes are meant to assess the understanding of the class material at the conceptual and terminological levels. Quizzes are “fill-the blank” exercises where students are asked to recognize key theoretical terms and concepts. Take-home assignments are short interpretive exercises on precise prompts. Papers are extensive acts of analysis and textual interpretation. The conceptual and terminological acuity tested in the in-class quizzes together with the interpretive practice developed in the take-home assignments are preparatory to the final activity of paper-writing.

ENG 315:0001 (30043): Research Writing in the Disciplines (Charlotte Asmuth)
BW133 – 12:30 p.m. – TTH
Prerequisite(s): Junior standing and a declared major.
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Writing Intensive
Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): May count towards the Professional Writing concentration; please refer to the English major checklist and consult with your advisor
Course description: This is an in-depth exploration of the genre of the academic peer-reviewed research article that will establish a strong foundation for students' future writing in their disciplines, especially those intending to pursue postgraduate study or applied research. Using a range of research articles from different disciplines, as well as other texts, class discussion, and in- and out-of-class assignments, the course strengthens students' analytical reading and synthetic writing skills during the preparation of a research article relevant to and in the style of their chosen field.
Students will gain an awareness of some of the differences in audience, approach, authority, and research methods relevant to different disciplines and an understanding of how the genre conventions of the peer-reviewed academic research article contribute to the advancement of knowledge in the disciplines.

ENG 317: Business and Technical Writing

| ENG 371:0001 (30056) Readings in Literary Theory and Criticism | (Robert Brinkley) | J102 – 12:30pm - TTH | Prerequisite: 6 credits beyond ENG 101 (ENG 170 and ENG 222 recommended) or instructor permission | Walter Benjamin: Critic, Translator, Marxist and Mystic | The course will be experimental and will explore ways in which students in the course can find ways to be theorists. What does it mean to be (or to act as) a theorist? How would each student like to do theory? What are the possible relationships between theory and practice? The 20th century German critic, translator, Marxist, mystic with provide a touchstone for the course. We will explore how he does theory (or theories—Benjamin had many theories) and how theory (or theories) engage texts (literary and otherwise) in his work. As we work with Benjamin we will also work with a range of theoretical, philosophical, historical and literary works (those Benjamin would have read and some he would not have read) that can help illuminate his project. The goal of the course, however, will be finding—by engaging Benjamin—students becomes theorists as well because (as the French philosophers Gilles Deleuze and Felix Guattari insist) theory is fundamentally a creative art.

Benjamin’s friends Scholem and Adorno both told him that he was trying to be both a Marxist and a mystic and that each precluded the other; he should choose. Benjamin responded that they were right—Marxism and Jewish mysticism did not together—but that, in working with the incompatibilities between the complementary approaches (if you like the gap between), all his insights arose, perhaps inasmuch as neither could tell him what to think, inasmuch as the incompatibility also left him not knowing what to think. There is no likelihood as far as I know that Benjamin knew of Keats’s aside about “negative capability,” but it may offer an insight into his theoretical practice: theory as negative capability?

ENG 381:0001 (30055) Themes in Literature: Documentary impulse in literature (Carla Billitteri)
NV227 – 1:00 p.m. – MWF
Prerequisites: 6 credits beyond ENG 101 (ENG 170 and ENG 222 recommended) or instructor permission
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Western Cultural Tradition

Course description: The impulse to document reality, to give a testimony to one’s moment in history and culture, has been one of the most characteristic features of literary production, evident in documentary poetics, historical theater, and the novel’s fictionalized reportage. Indeed, we could locate this impulse at the very beginning of the Western canon, with Homer, whose Iliad relates the history of the Trojan war, and follow it forward through Dante, whose Inferno is populated with historical figures, and the Shakespeare of the history plays. In more recent times, the documentary impulse guides such diverse writers as Claudia Rankine, whose book of lyric prose, Citizen, explores the hidden racism in contemporary Western societies; Mark Nowak, whose poetry documents the harsh conditions of miners’ lives and communities; Rob Halpern, whose prose-poetry hybrid Common Place explores the embodied response to unending militarization and economic exploitation; and Susan Somers-Willett, whose Women of Troy, an intermedia collaboration with photographer Brenda Ann Kenneally and radio producer Lu Olkowski, narrates the hidden lives of women in poverty.

This class will explore ten of the most significant examples of the documentary impulse in twentieth- and twenty-first-century American literature, encompassing works of fiction and poetry along with hybrid texts that bring the two genres together along with photography, journalism, memoir, and factual data. Though much of our reading will be in prose I place this work under the general heading of “documentary poetics” as the critical literature on our poetic examples has best theorized this impulse.

ENG 382:0001 (30053) Major Genres Historical Period: British Novel (Deborah Rogers)
J104 – 11:00 a.m. - TTH
Prerequisites: 6 credits beyond ENG 101 (ENG 170 and ENG 222 recommended) or instructor permission.
General education requirement(s) satisfied: Western Cultural Tradition
English major requirements satisfied: pre-1800, British, 300-level literature

Course description: Focusing on the eighteenth century, this class will explore the development of the novel by studying a sequence of works in their historical and cultural contexts. We will consider such topics as postcolonialism, individualism, realism, genre, and canonicity. Evaluation will be based on brief papers, reading quizzes, research exercises, presentations, a midterm, a final, and participation. Texts will vary but may include works by Behn, Defoe, Fielding, Richardson, Burney, Sterne, Radcliffe, and Austen.
ENG 402:0001 (29884): Topics in Writing and Research: Textual Scholarship (Benjamin Friedlander)
5310 – 9:00 a.m. – MWF
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing or instructor’s permission.
Satisfies the following general education requirement(s): Writing Intensive.
Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): None

Course description: This class will introduce students to the theory and practice of textual scholarship—the practice in particular. Students will work on a group project with the instructor, and, in parallel, develop projects of their own.

As a field of study, textual scholarship encompasses many different kinds of practice, but these can be loosely gathered under three general headings: bibliography, criticism, editing. In its theory portion, the course will provide an overview of the issues and concepts crucial to all three; the workshop portion will focus on the last, giving hands-on experience in the preparation of a scholarly edition. To facilitate this work, there will be, in addition to our theoretical readings, a reference book with practical advice, and a wide range of concrete examples.

Anyone who works with texts will find even a brief acquaintance with this field of study enlightening; those with a passion for books as material artifacts, or with an eye for the small detail that matters, will find it inspiring as well.

Graduate students who enroll will also write a short paper responding to the theoretical readings (a paper for another seminar that makes use of the theoretical material will be welcome as a substitute). Undergraduates who use this course for their capstone will write a longer introduction to their individual project.

ENG 407:0001 (29762): Advanced Fiction Writing (Gregory Howard)
NV406 – 9:00 a.m. – MWF
Prerequisites: ENG 307 or permission of Instructor.

Course description: This course is a fiction workshop at the advanced level. This is the advanced level course for fiction writers in the English concentration in creative writing, and may be taken in tandem with ENG 499 (capstone experience). May be repeated for credit.

ENG 418: (27903) Topics Professional Writing: Intersection of Government & Science (Luke Redington)
NV406 – 2:00 p.m. – TTH
Prerequisites: ENG 317 or instructor permission.

Course description: In the United States, science and government maintain a complicated, consequential, and sometimes troubled relationship. The development of thermonuclear weapons, the advent of DNA testimony in courtrooms, and the proliferation of cybersecurity breaches all embody this relationship. At the center of all these storms, and many others, is technical writing. Technical writing aids in the development of scientific discovery, and it helps circulate these discoveries among a variety of stakeholders. Technical writing is likewise the lifeblood of governmental efforts to understand, regulate, and fund scientific endeavors. This course therefore focuses on technical writing as a site of multiple intersections between government and science. Our approach to technical writing will emphasize rhetorical theory, the propagation of technical ideas to public audiences, and ethical issues. Because this is a writing intensive course, students will produce two major projects.

ENG459:0001 (27788) British Seminar: Love in 19th-c British Romantic Lit (Elizabeth Neiman)
LH204 – 9:30 a.m. – TTH
Prerequisites: 6 hours of English, including ENG 317 and permission of the instructor.
Satisfies the general education Writing Intensive requirement.

Course description: “The still, sad music of humanity”: love, loss, and lyricism in the British Romantic period

The British Romantic period (roughly 1790 to 1820) is often represented as a break with the literary past. With the advance of the print market, writers reject the stylized convention of court culture to experiment with new forms of writing. These experiments are characterized by the author’s turn inwards to emotion, imagination, and self-reflection. In the 1790s, first-generation Romantics like William Wordsworth were energized by the French Revolution’s challenge to aristocratic privileges. The new turn inwards permits authors to explore not only their own feelings but also, most famously in the case of Wordsworth, the passions and experiences of people from humble walks of life. This course explores the Romantic turn inward as it inflects the work of a wide range of writers, including Wordsworth, second generation Romantics like Percy Shelley, Lord Byron, and Mary Shelley, and the dozens of anonymous and often female poets and novelists whose work, according to critics, flooded the market. This broad lens will allow us to explore traditional Romantic themes as well as the Romantic “Other”—the Gothic and sentimental novels and poetry that canonical Romantic poets defined their work against. In pairing canonical writers with the lesser known, we will question long-standing dichotomies like nature v. art; serious v. sensational; poetry v. novels; poetic v. didactic; masculine v. feminine; Romantic v. Gothic; transcendent v. ephemeral.

Most of our work together will consist of seminar-style discussions and regular, low-stakes writing assignments, such as notes or posts on Blackboard. The course will culminate with group presentations on an additional text (to be selected by the group). The final project is a longer paper (8 to 12 pages) that will grow out of our work together over the semester.

ENG 496:0001 (28589): Field Experience in Professional Writing (Charlsye J. Smith Diaz)
Prerequisite: 6 credits in writing; ENG 317; and permission

Satisfies the following English major requirement(s): May count toward the Professional Writing concentration or minor; please check with your advisor.
Satisfies the following general education requirements: Capstone Experience in the Professional Writing track

Course description: Students work with businesses, professions, and other organizations approved by the department. The work in the course varies with each student enrolled and with the needs of the cooperating employer but normally involves either research, public relations, reporting, editing, interviewing, indexing, or other allied activity requiring skill in reading and writing. May be repeated for credit up to 6 credit hours.
Credits: 1-6.
ENG 499:0001 (28694): Capstone Experience in English (Laura Cowan)
Prerequisites: Senior English major and permission of department
Satisfies the general education Capstone Experience requirement. Pass/Fail grade only.

Course description: Pre-professional experience supervised by an English faculty member, attached to an appropriate 3 credit English course (i.e. completion of a substantial critical paper based upon content of a 400-level literature course; a semester tutoring in the Writing Center after ENG 395: English Internship; ENG 496: Field Experience; or completion of a finished manuscript after an appropriate 400-level creative writing course.

Requirement must also register for the zero (0) credit hour ENG 499. This is an accounting mechanism for Student Records to track the completion of the Senior Capstone Requirement.

ENG 518: 0001 (29916): Topics in Professional & Technical Writing (Charlsye Diaz)
NV 406 – 12:30 p.m. – TTH
Prerequisites: Graduate standing in English or permission

Course description: A study in the theory and the practice of teaching technical and professional writing. This course will review the fundamentals of effective communication in the workplace such as processes, forms, and styles of writing in professional work environments. It will also discuss pedagogical approaches to professional writing and strategies to help students develop their problem solving and critical thinking skills as they respond to different writing environments and different audiences.

ENG 529:0001 (27433): Studies in Literature: Documentary impulse in literature (Carla Billitteri)
NV 406 – 3:00-5:50 p.m. – M
Prerequisites: Graduate standing in English or permission of the instructor.

Course description: The impulse to document reality, to give a testimony to one's moment in history and culture, has been one of the most characteristic features of literary production, evident in documentary poetics, historical theater, and the novel's fictionalized reportage. Indeed, we could locate this impulse at the very beginning of the Western canon, with Homer, whose Iliad relates the history of the Trojan war, and follow it forward through Dante, whose Inferno is populated with historical figures, and the Shakespeare of the history plays. In more recent times, the documentary impulse guides such diverse writers as Claudia Rankine, whose book of lyric prose, Citizen, explores the hidden racism in contemporary Western societies; Mark Nowak, whose poetry documents the harsh conditions of miners' lives and communities; Rob Halpern, whose prose-poetry hybrid Common Place explores the embodied response to unending militarization and economic exploitation; and Susan Somers-Willett, whose Women of Troy, an intermedia collaboration with photographer Brenda Ann Kenneally and radio producer Lu Olkowski, narrates the hidden lives of women in poverty.

This class will explore ten of the most significant examples of the documentary impulse in twentieth- and twenty-first-century American literature, encompassing works of fiction and poetry along with hybrid texts that bring the two genres together along with photography, journalism, memoir, and factual data.
Though much of our reading will be in prose I place this work under the general heading of “documentary poetics” as the critical literature on our poetic examples has best theorized this impulse.

Our readings begin in the early twentieth century, when documentary poetics, under the pressure of the Great Depression and in response to the rapid transformation of society, acquired a more insistently political orientation, illuminating the marginalized experience of the poor, the working class, emigrants, and others. Since the early decades of the twentieth-century, the political and ethical consequences of economic crisis, labor tension, and ethnic and racial conflict have been central concerns for writers in this tradition. Moreover, while the subject matter of these writers brings particular lives and particular historical moments into sharper focus, there are ethical and theoretical implications to this work as well. This course will attend to those implications as well as to the historical and political dimensions of our readings.

Expected readings, literary texts#
Charles Reznikoff, Testimony (1934); Muriel Rukeyser, The Book of the Dead (1938); James Algee and Walker Evans, Let Us Now Praise Famous Men (1940); Theresa Hak Kyung Cha, Dictee (1982); Mark Nowak, Shut Up Shut Down (2004) and Coal Mountain Elementary (2009); Claudia Rankine (Don’t Let Me Be Lonely (2004) and Citizen (2015); Susan Somers-Willett, Brenda Ann Kenneally, and Lu Olkowski, Women of Troy (2009); Rob Halpern, Common Place (2015). Note: Mark Nowak and Rob Halpern, have been invited to campus. If all goes well, both Nowak and Halpern will visit the seminar and will be featured in the New Writing Series programming.

Alternative texts may include: John Dos Passos, U.S.A., A Trilogy (1938); Zora Neale Hurston, Dust Tracks on a Road (1942); Richard Wright, Black Boy (1945); Marlene NourbeSe Philip, Zong! (2008); C.D. Wright, One with Others (2010).

Expected readings, theoretical texts#

#Alternative texts may include: Judith Butler, Frames of War: When is Life Grievable? (2009); Stefano Harney and Fred Moten, The Undercommons: Fugitive Planning & Black Study (2013).

Requirements and Assignments
Attendance; weekly critical responses and bi-monthly critical annotations on assigned texts; final research paper.

ENG 556:0001 (27434): English Romanticism (Robert Brinkley)
NV406 – 6:00-8:50 p.m. – M
Prerequisites: Graduate standing in English or permission of the instructor.

Course description: A survey of the six major romantic poets with attention to the critical writings of the period.

ENG 570:0001 (27960): Critical Theory: Poetics of Fiction (David Kress)
NV406 – 6:00-8:50 p.m. – T
Prerequisites: Graduate standing in English or permission of the instructor.
Course description: “Rigorous attention to literary structures, in other words, poetics”—Christine Brooke-Rose Poetics? Of fiction? Poetics of fiction? Poetics of fiction! Reading widely in narrative theory and “experimental” fiction, this course will introduce students to a poetics of fiction and examine the way theoretical and creative texts intervene in each other. In other words, the course will explore the ways in which experimental fiction is both generated by and generative of theories about fiction—and vice versa. Traditionally, the term “poetics” is most commonly applied to studies in poetry, but in a more accurate sense, poetics should be thought of a way of theorizing linguistic (and other) texts that gives equal attention to critical and creative approaches to theory. To that end, this course will approach a poetics of fiction by debating fiction’s theories, practices, productions, and place in the contemporary world. The central critical questions for the seminar will be similarly experimental: we will not begin with nor rest on the assumption that the study of and/or the creation of fiction is inherently necessary, valuable, or even interesting; rather, this course will test those foundations to determine whether or not they can serve as grounds for future study.
That is to say, we’ll take our cue from Michel Foucault, as we try to map out the topologies of fiction, theory, and poetics as institutions: “It seems to me that the real political task in a society such as ours is to criticize the workings of institutions, which appear to be both neutral and independent; to criticize and attack them in such a manner that the political violence which has always exercised itself obscurely through them will be unmasked, so that one can fight against them.”

ENG 580:0001 (29087): Topics in Poetry & Poetics: The Nineties (Steven Evans)
NV406 – 6:00-8:50 p.m. – W
Prerequisites: Graduate standing in English or permission of the instructor.

Course description: The National Poetry Foundation will host a major conference on The Poetry and Poetics of the 1990s in late June 2017 here on the flagship campus of the University of Maine. This seminar will survey the decade’s literary and artistic practices with a focus on the writers, movements, concepts, and controversies that are likely to be represented in the context of the conference. Special attention will be paid to the formidable sonic archive associated with the poetry of the 1990s, but students will have considerable leeway in determining the direction their research takes. The seminar will also offer a glimpse of—and, for those who are interested, a chance to participate in—the behind-the-scenes work that goes into hosting a national event that blends scholarship (academic conference) and creative work (literary festival).

ENG 596:0001 (29917): Graduate Internship in Professional Writing (Charlsye Diaz)
Prerequisite: ENG 515 or ENG 516

Course description: Supervised work in professional writing. Graduate students may work with businesses, professionals, organizations approved by the department in an area of professional writing. The work varies for each student enrolled, but normally involves writing, editing, research, reporting, interviewing, indexing, or other writing-related activity. Students must apply for this course before the semester of enrollment. Students are expected to work approximately 12 to 15 hours per week per 3 hours credit. May be repeated for credit up to 6 credit hours.
